

Wake up to glittering mountains kissed by clouds

Ensnconced in the quaint, misty town of Ramboda, situated within an hour each of the ancient Ceylonese city of Kandy and the cool, verdant tea-fragranced peaks of Nuwara Eliya -

Floating Mountain Villa sits on historic Glenloch Estate, established during colonial British rule in 1917.

Dripping with emerald hillsides, a blushing sunny cold, and tinted at dusk by celestial sapphires that suspend this little nook of the world in a fascinating timelessness -

A playful waltz between the 1920s and the 2020s.

Floating Mountain Villa is steeped in significance

- from its nook amongst the mountains once fondly dubbed 'Little England', the villa has witnessed the passage of time from Sri Lanka's colonial roots as Ceylon, its golden age of tea, eras of roaring royalty and finery, to now -

its retreat into a preservation of a simpler life that is removed from the bustle, and magical in its quiet.

There's so little privacy left in the world.
We guard it with millennia-old mountain sentinels,
the hush of history and the calming assurance of tradition.

You are not in just a suprisingly different place for a tropical island.
You are immersed in a different time altogether.

An infinite mirror to the sky

Surrounded by stone giants and jewelled by forests that echo as the light melts into dusk - slink into a mirror of water and float in a snow globe of serenity.

Framed by six outdoor dining enclaves, sink your teeth into a luscious hill country meal in candle light, and experience the simple magic of being embraced by the same milky twilight that has inspired poetry for generations.

Pack for a summery early winter

Situated 3700 feet above sea level, this hill station was a favourite of the colonial British for being a milder, pleasant version of England's weather.

From chilly mornings, to balmy afternoons and crisp evenings with biting breezes off the national reservoir at Kotmale - you can dress light but cozy. Most sharp winds are usually sun kissed or softened by the curve of lush tree canopies before they find you.

Tickle the fancies of your tastebuds

Sample the kitchen's favourite cuisines - Sri Lankan, Indian, Continental, Italian, French, East Asian Fusion.

The chef recommends every day to be a culinary exploration - contrasting vibrant flavours against the cool serenity of your surroundings.

Your host

Gowri Ganesan is a UK-based lawyer who fell in love with Glenloch Estate on a search for a holiday home in her native country. Instantly enamoured with the hush that fell around you as you entered Floating Mountain Villa, with its proud Scottish architecture and strong old bones - Gowri was certain she had found the place of her vacationing dreams.

While renovating it, she decided it was too beautiful to keep to herself. Today, she shares the magic of this historical home with romantics, adventurers, artists and soul-searchers - those who come to be lost and to be found.
